The Colors of Heaven: Guardians of Light

By Jonathan Olvera

The sky was illuminated by the starlight in the night. It was a familiar yet magnificent scene on the rocky planet Earth.

Time is a sense of change, a cycle of countless occurrences on the face of this creation. The earth had responded countless times to the words of the Great Creator.

Once, Earth was a ball of fire. Now, it has become a visible friend, formed of tangible materials.

It was a wonder to witness—the stars in the sky providing safe passage for the benevolent works of the Creator’s Guardians.

The stars shone in many colors—white, red, yellow, green, and blue. They burned with the core of the Earth and sang softly under the guidance of celestial giants like Jupiter and Mars.

Dancing in the vast pool of memories woven by the grand work of the universe, all life was ready to take its place.

It was breathtaking! The Creator had fashioned this masterpiece, and the angels ensured its harmony, guiding the dancing fireballs to rest in the earth’s center, where they would burn until their fuel was spent.

The face of the Earth is filled with thousands of blessings for us to be grateful for. And it is the angels who make it all possible.
